

COMM 388 : Electronic Media Skills for the Liberal Arts Student

This course is intended for students seeking technical training in electronic media skills for non-professional applications. Students choose from a variety of skills, including mixing and editing audio, making video movies, and creating audio and video resources for World Wide Web sites on the Internet. The on-campus internship course is open to all students. Student will complete internship paperwork monitored by a designated staff member and signed-off on by the department chair of either the Communications and Media Arts Department or the Physical Education and Sport Studies Department for a letter grade. At least 50 hours of crew work from the student is required over a semester (about 10 events). (This course may be taken for credit as PHED 388.)
